Table Talk

When I was in college I lived for a year in a condemned house with five members of a local marching band in the Como neighborhood of Minneapolis. Same street as the zoo, different area entirely. Once, we hosted a fundraiser to get a cat that one of the guys' adopted after a friend found her in a box down by the Mississippi River near campus spayed. It was a great time, my rent was like $200 a month, and I just had to deal with the fact that my bedroom had windows into the living room. That spot's a DIY music venue now.

When we lived there, one of the guys who lived in the pair of bedrooms in the attic was an avid collector of glass dragon sculptures. I'm talking shelves. Every time we'd walk past a ninja sword store at the mall, he'd always need to stop and look at their selection of dragons. I saw a local production of The Glass Menagerie as a youth (didn't get it at the time) so I'd always tease him about gentleman callers (which in hindsight is probably an even funnier joke (you'd have to know him)*).

Once, his grandma sent him a pair of glass dolphins, mid-jump. He didn't appreciate them, they weren't dragons. While his glass dragon collection lived on well lit and well maintained shelves, his glass dolphins lived in a plant in the kitchen. Eventually, Pam (the cat we had the fundraiser for) got a little too curious and knocked the dolphins out of the plant, and they broke on the floor. Of course, that caused the dolphins to become a sacred heirloom that were callously destroyed by that darn cat.

That guy really wanted to become a screenwriter, and wrote a pilot for a show about one of our friends' experiences discovering herself herself during her freshman year, while we were all still in school and represented as characters on the show, so sometimes it was hard to tell what his motivations were. Like, was he manipulating situations to have interesting plot points for the show he was writing?

Eventually, thankfully, we all remained friends for a while despite moving apart. Him and the guy with the cat ended up moving in together, and rooming across a couple different spots. Their eventual apartment, before the guy with the cat moved in with his girlfriend, was right across the street from my second favorite bar. My dog ate the egg off the seder plate there, and after a long night across the street, I challenged a bartender to a catch-as-catch-can wrestling match in their living room, and won.

He was never into Magic, but I really hope he found the light, and is excited for this set.

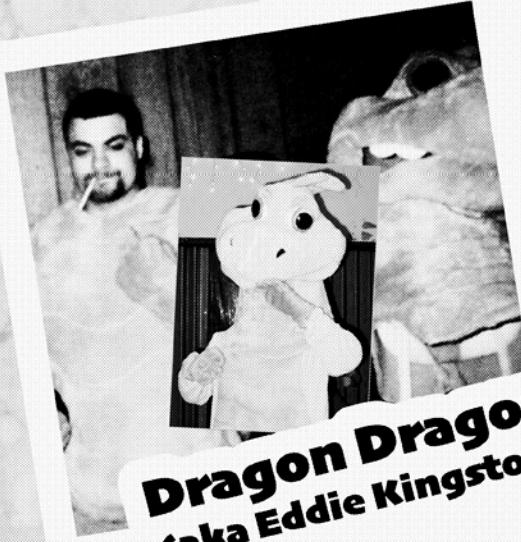

*I haven't spoken to him in about 6-7 years now so it might not be funny anymore

why do they have to stick in the f-word to get the pg they put the word in to get the pg-13 because they were afraid if they got a pg everybody would think it was innocuous okay next movie and it's dragon heart a medieval adventure film with a wild premise about a friendship between a knight dennis quaid and a genuine fire-breathing dragon in their efforts to combat an evil king here's where they first talk with each other the dragon hunting night and the world's last surviving dragon voiced by sean connery and when there are no more dragons to slay how will you make a living night shut up yes the old shot and the groin joke eventually however the knight and the dragon become friends and the issue now is what to name a dragon i know those stars very well do you see the shape that they make the dragon yes they call it draco it means dragon in the scholar speech so instead of calling me dragon in your tongue you'll call me dragon in some other tongue eventually they joined forces to defeat an evil king named ainan but there's a catch the young king and the dragon share the same heart it's a very long story and to kill the king dennis quaid must first kill his friend one you will never win until ainan's evil is destroyed and to do that you must destroy me no the action story in dragon heart does not hold up well when compared with similar sword fighting adventures such as braveheart or rob roy and dennis quaid's character isn't compelling at all his voice sounds like it's been run through a bass amplifier only sean connery's marvelous voice manages i think to communicate the magical tone the more childlike tone that this film is after i appreciate the ambition of this fairy tale but it just didn't work for me well it did work for me gene and i think you're uh kind of misleading to compare it to braveheart and uh rob roy because it's not that kind of movie this is basically a family movie even you might even say a children's movie i said that and suitable for children and as for the voices sean connery's voice which is marvelous was also run through a bass amplifier so i don't know why you're complaining well no it sounded more no it sounded more likely it sounded more like sean connery than quaid sounded i guess that i was getting dissonance as i was looking at dennis quaid i've never heard him sound like that no well that's right they're playing around with the sound but here's something that's marvelous about this movie and that is the creation of this dragon i like that first of all the lip sync is perfect every time sean connery talks it looks like that dragon is really talking then the facial expressions and then the whole body and the art design of the body put them inside of the mouth roger eath and so forth put that dragon in a better story but i think it is a triumph of special effects that dragon and i thought the movie itself was perfectly acceptable as family entertainment not the story at all when we come back charlie sheen detects signs of life from outer space in the sci-fi thriller the arrival

Who art thou?

In the aftermath of the New Phyrexian invasion, representatives from each clan - Abzan, Mardu, Jeskai, Temur, and Sultai - rebelled against their Dragonlord rulers, and each summoned a Spirit Dragon to represent their clan and their principles. Although these spirit dragons assisted in defeating their elder dragon counterparts by forcing them into a Dragonstorm, many years later, Dragonstorms are running rampant across the multiverse, producing new threats for the peaceful clans and their members. Tarkir has evolved, as have the clans:

Prehistoric 'sea dragon' found

"Sea dragons" were common when the sea was warmer. The remains of a prehistoric monster have been found off the east coast of Yorkshire.

The plesiosaur, which resembles the Loch Ness monster, dates back to the beginning of the Cretaceous period 130 million years ago.

Known as the "sea dragon", it would have had a round short body, four flippers, a short tail and a very long neck with a small head.

The creature was found by amateur palaeontologist Nigel Armstrong when he stumbled across the bones sticking out of the sand just south of Filey.

The skeleton shows the plesiosaur specimen measured four metres in length.

The dragon skull is well-preserved, with a bone crest above the nose or the average for our species.

Chinese researchers have unveiled an ancient skull that could belong to a completely new species of human.

The team has claimed it is our closest evolutionary relative among known species of hominids because, according to them, it looks like us.
